Economic Research Seminar April 1, 2016

Events

March 24, 2016   Earth System Science & Policy, Seminar, ESSP   0 Comment

An Economic Research Seminar with presenter Haochi Zheng is set for Friday, April 1, from 12:00 noon to 1:30 p.m.

Haochi Zheng joined Earth System Science & Policy at UND in 2010 after finishing her doctoral study in Agricultural and Applied Economics with a conservation biology minor at the University of Minnesota. Her major academic interests are environmental and natural resource economics and ecological economics with a specific emphasis on the institutions and mechanisms that guide human behavior in natural resource use and management. Some of her recent research topics include land use change related to renewable energy production, reforestation policy, the relationship between human activities and species biodiversity, and evaluation of ecosystem services.

Haochi is currently working with the U.S. Geological Survey and its Earth Resources Observation and Science Center on evaluating the effects of an expanded agricultural base for biofuels and concurrent change in climate on ecosystem sustainability across the Northern Great Plains. She worked for the Initiative for Renewable Energy and the Environment as a graduate research assistant, and with the Legislative Citizens Commission on
